

The City of Burlington created the Office of Racial Equity, Inclusion, and Belonging (REIB) in 2019. Since that time, the REIB and the City of Burlington have remained committed to addressing racial disparities and injustices, while also adapting to respond to emerging threats such as the opioid crisis, houselessness, and the effects of climate change, that disproportionately impact the most underserved, underrecognized, and marginalized communities in our city.

As social justice work across the city continues to expand and evolve, we want to ensure our vision and mission not only reflect where we are in this present moment, but where we are heading. You – our community – will play a large role in helping us shape the new vision and mission of equity work across all city departments.

We invite you to register for one of the in-person community conversations around our vision and mission work below.
